

Abstract of the Disclosure

A friction bearing is described, comprising a support shell and a slide layer made of a bearing metal which is applied to the support shell. In order to obtain information about the service life of the friction bearing it is proposed that the slide layer carries a cover layer forming a running layer whose thickness corresponds at most to the wear and tear of the cover layer expected during the average service life of the slide layer.